ABOUT

Jacob Moon is an ARMY veteran and retired sergeant at a large Florida-based county jail where he spent every day of his 28-year career assigned to inmate housing areas, including the last 15 years in the psychiatric unit. He self-published his three novels, Furlough, Dead Reckoning (a 2023 Silver Falchion Award finalist for Best Supernatural Novel), and Letter 26, released in December 2024. Originally from Minnesota, Jacob's short work appears in several magazines and anthologies, most notably The Saturday Evening Post. He retains all rights to his published works. Living in Clearwater, FL, he is now free to wander on the job, writing at a collection of coffee shops, restaurants, and vacation destinations. His current work-in-progress is his memoir about his many harrowing jail experiences during his career.

Psychological horror meets police procedural in this chilling tale about a rare quirk of the funeral industry.

When Abby Carlson’s job as a dietitian comes to mind now, it’s accompanied by a looming threat: the Minneapolis serial killer who’s been targeting women based on the first letter of their jobs, and who’s ripe to pick a “D” victim. He follows his gruesome routine—preserving and posing the corpses per their professions, then posting his exploits on social media. But the threat is abstract in a city as big as Minneapolis...until Abby finds herself drugged in the back of a van, the latest potential viral hit.

In response to the kidnapping, Detective Cal Randall is called back early from mandated medical leave. Working with the FBI, he’s been on the trail of the “Profession Killer” since the start. Despite what’s become crippling anxiety he still has to work to control, there’s no choice about where he needs to be. A demented killer must be stopped, and Abby—the last of PK’s remaining letters—must be saved.
